

Breaking Down Silos

Where do "Silos" come from?

Program Details

Silos are the barriers that exist between departments causing people who are supposed to be on the same team to work against one another. Employees who are working in silos are not always the result of a structural challenge. Sometimes, silos occur because leaders at the top have interpersonal problems.

Whatever the reason in your organization, breaking down those silos can be challenging and time consuming. Attend this complimentary webinar for information on intervention techniques, processes and tools to facilitate communication across teams.
