

Leading Remote Teams

Maximizing productivity and communication in a virtual environment.

Program Details

Working remotely is finally here because of the Coronavirus, and many managers just got uncomfortable. Not only because of the virus, but now they are being forced to lead a remote team. Many managers that are now responsible for leading a remote team without any prior experience. Leading teams is hard. Leading an entire team that's new to working remotely is even harder. Leadership is already hard, and it just got harder. Many people can manage a remote team but leading them is much different. A leader is defined as "Someone whose actions inspire, empower, and serve in order to elevate others over an extended period of time." Add a remote workforce and living out this definition of leadership becomes challenging, but we can help you focus on what is important.

Training Outcomes

This three-hour program takes managers through a practical workshop on how to set expectations, communicate and maximize productivity.

- Practical strategies to implement
- when managing through times of uncertainty using VUCA
- Tips to effectively communicate with the team
- How to use technology well
- Establishing trust and empathy
- Development and continued engagement

As a bonus, we will explore the concepts behind VUCA leadership, how to lead in times of volatility, uncertainty, complexity and ambiguity.

Training Length

Half Day